

Personal Narrative of Research

You are to write about a one page (but no more than two) paper that describes the process you have gone through in writing your researched argument paper. Write it in first person (using “I” and “me”). This paper is worth 4 points. Bring it with you to your teacher conference session.

In the first paragraph, talk about your motivations and commitment to exploring this topic, describe how you first began to formulate your questions, and describe initial research activities.

In the next paragraph or two, share your successes, your frustrations, and even your failures with the research process. Include what you learned, how your thinking changed, and how your research questions evolved. You can also create a more interesting paper by adding information about how you overcame research obstacles.

Finally, conclude with a brief overview of your remaining work to be done and how you plan to accomplish it.

Personal Narrative of Research

You are to write about a one page (but no more than two) paper that describes the process you have gone through in writing your researched argument paper. Write it in first person (using “I” and “me”). This paper is worth 4 points. Bring it with you to your teacher conference session.

In the first paragraph, talk about your motivations and commitment to exploring this topic, describe how you first began to formulate your questions, and describe initial research activities.

In the next paragraph or two, share your successes, your frustrations, and even your failures with the research process. Include what you learned, how your thinking changed, and how your research questions evolved. You can also create a more interesting paper by adding information about how you overcame research obstacles.

Finally, conclude with a brief overview of your remaining work to be done and how you plan to accomplish it.